The Election-Its Lesson While the smoke of battle has not you cleared away to afford a distinct view of the field, we think enough is known of the result, to warrant the opinion that the Repub licans have met with a serious check, though Cork, he traveled through Ireland, the highlands of Scotland, and England before going to Paris. At Paris he remained a month, and then started, to make the continental tour, visiting the principal cities and | deliver the nation from death; and so strong ng his neighbors, will secom any one of half the popular speakers of the State. The fact is, it is not smid the noisy demonstrations of public gatherings and set tible to the force of reason; but on the con-trary, most persons are either drawn to such monstration and orstory, and too little upon that if the supremacy of the Republican party is to be perpetuated, it must be by combining and comenting its members into a more compact and better disciplined organization. Its principles and policy must be deficitely and clearly defined, and faithfully adhered to. No one man or set of men i its ranks must be permitted to set up the and by sheer persistence compel the party to accept them as the only way of obtaining

Another requisite to the efficiency of the party, is a standard-bearer, whose tried loyality, patriotism, ability and prudence are such as to command its respect and confidence and those of the nation. He must be one whose claim to popular support is something more than a set of political views which he may have made his stock in trade. No hobby-rider, however skillfully mount- at Kessler's Hotel. ed, will answer as the leader of the great Republican host in 1868. He must be one who has something more than a record of yeas and nays or a patent on a platform to commend him to the nation. He must have omething for the hearts as well as the intellects of the people-whose name has a ring that will vibrate every cord of the national heart-and whose record is known and read of all men. Such a man is rarely found, but fortunately the Republicans have such an one, who would constitute a pillar of strength, around which the surges of par-tizen detraction would dash in vain. That Ulysses S. Grant, the glorious leader of the conquering hosts of lovality through the memorable storm of blood and cirnage, out sale by of which the nation has just emerged. on his merchant tailoring establishment in their standard-bearer and go forward with the old way, keeping on hand a good stock of the work of organization and labor, and one by cloths for plain, business and dres, suits and year from this time they will have reason to by making suits to order for his customers. The Cincinnati Commercial says the authors "have had large experience in preparing works of a similar character, have taken a peculiar to terest in American pioneer life, and have succeeded especially well in giving a record of facts and events that are particularly interesting."

The Cincinnati Times says, "Every place of consequence in the vast West is described, every historical event related. Years of labor and of travel were consumed in collecting and preparing the materials, and many thousand, of dollars expended. Indeed, more expense was incurred before the first sheet of paper was bought upon which to print it, than to most books of its size and price when completed for the market.
